CONSIDER WATER

Consider Water is a multifaceted dance piece inspired by Davalois Fearon's experiences of limited access to clean drinking water when visiting family in Jamaica. It combines three types of artistic expression: dynamic and fluid dance, original music, and visual arts to bring attention to domestic and global water issues, like water scarcity, water quality impairment and water-related natural disasters. Consider Water premiered at the Joyce Theater in 2017.

"The piece takes the audience through the various stages that water can be; gas, liquid, and solid. It then shows the joys that water brings with sweeping movements, and contrasts the miracle of water with the devastation it is capable of delivering."

- BronxTimes

"Davalois Fearon made an electrifying Bay Area debut as a choreographer last December at the Berkeley Arts Festival performance space with her solo piece, Consider Water, performing a ritualistic piece to a live score by reed expert Mike McGinnis."

- Andrew Gilbert, The Mercury News

"Fearon's movements are both gymnastic and natural, as the dancers combined crouching and running with sudden bursts of dynamic, leg-thrusting energy, and the work was a haunting reminder that Americans are so lucky to be able to take our water for granted, turning on a tap without effort."

- Mary Cargill, DanceViewTimes
